Message from the Interim Pastor

Hello! I am delighted to be your interim pastor for the next many months. I've heard wonderful things about Good Shepherd from Daris Bultena, Janna VanderWoude, and Jack Carlson, and my initial meeting with the Session was very encouraging. I think we're going to have a great time together! I'm taking this opportunity to answer some questions that generally come up in congregations at this point.

What Does an Interim Pastor Do?

In the past, the Interim Pastor was sometimes seen as a kind of babysitter—charged with simply keeping the church's programs and worship going until a new pastor could be found. Now, however, Interim Pastors are understood to be responsible not only for keeping things going but also for helping the congregation take a look at itself and at what members would like its future to look like.

Part of that process involves making changes in the way things are done. Especially when the previous pastor served the church for 10 years or more, as Daris did, it's important that the congregation experience a variety of ways to "be church." That way, members have a better sense of how they really want the church to operate in the future.

I promise not to make changes willy-nilly. I also promise that there will be changes. Some of them you'll decide to keep; others you'll let fall by the way-side.

Interim Tasks? What Are They?

In addition to doing most of the things any pastor does, Interim Pastors are charged with working on the following five process tasks. I won't always identify what I'm doing as being part of a particular one of these tasks, but they form the basis of most everything we'll do together.

Coming to terms with history. This means taking an honest look at the congregation—its strengths and weaknesses, its shortcomings and accomplishments. It means identifying and addressing any problems as well as recognizing and truly appreciating the organization's strengths and accomplishments.

Exploring identity and direction. How is God calling the church into its future, and what kind of pastor does the church need in order to grow into that future?

Making leadership and/or operational changes. Sometimes a former pastor has operated in a particular way, one that worked for her or him but may not work in that person's absence. Does Session need to be reorganized? Are there responsibilities held by the former pastor that now need to be given to members?

Renewing denominational linkages. Sometimes, especially with a long-term pastor, churches stray a bit from "the Presbyterian way." This is an opportunity for the congregational to check its denominational DNA and perhaps to make some changes.

Committing to new leadership and a new direction. One of the major strengths of the Presbyterian system of having interim pastors is that members have a chance during the Interim to "get over" the previous pastor. If that person was well-loved, members need time to grieve and prepare to move on. If that person was not so very appreciated, members need time to get over their anger or disappointment. This time (and process) allows the congregation to truly embrace the next called pastor.

How Long Will The Interim Period Last?

The short answer? Only God knows.

Blessings,
Rev. Jeanne Gay

Summer Music

Do you know someone who could add musically to our summer worship? The choir will take July and August off and we are looking for talent! If you know someone who sings, plays an instrument, dances,... If they are inspired by the Holy Spirit, let's invite them to join us and share their gift. See Farrell if you have someone who would be willing to worship with us.
